“Action, which springs from the mind, from speech, and from the body, produces either good or evil results; by action are caused the conditions of men, the highest, the middling, and the lowest.

A man obtains the result of a good or evil mental act in his mind; that of a verbal act in his mind; that of a verbal act in his speech; that of a bodily act in his body.

In consequences of sinful acts committed with his body, a man becomes in the next birth an inanimate thing; in consequences in the next birth an inanimate thing; in consequences of sins committed by speech, he becomes a bird or a beast; in consequence of mental sins he is reborn in a low caste.”

Two Days National Seminar on Legal Environment of Business in Changing Scenario

The rapid scientific technological advancements are reshaping the world. Developments in information and communication technology have revolutionized every activity, be it scientific or business and commerce or individual. For business and commerce, it has facilitated improvements in productivity and bottom line of the business and commerce besides opportunities for better customer service. The productivity improvements come out of the increased speed, accuracy and ability to handle big volumes that technology offers. In the financial sector and banking, the developments in information technology have spelt very special benefits. In today's globally competitive market, knowledge constantly makes itself obsolete with the result that today's advanced knowledge is tomorrow's ignorance. One has to be on the learning curve and continuously move up. All knowledge workers have to leverage intellectual capital for growth—creative destruction—keep on innovating— otherwise someone else will be at the top of the pecking order. Companies function in a world of exponentially shortening product and service life cycles where customer preferences and technologies change in a discontinuous and non-linear fashion and business paradigms and rules become obsolete. The future winners will be those business organisations who escape from the gravitational pull of the past on the fuel of innovation. In view of above University Five Year Law College, University of Rajasthan, Jaipur is going to organize two days National Seminar in collaboration with Department of Business Administration.
